No effect of MMR withdrawal on the incidence of autism, a total population study / HONDA, Hideo; SHIMIZU, Yasuo; RUTTER, Michael

In: Journal of Child Psychology and Psychiatry, 46(6), June 2005 572-579

The unique circumstances of a Japanese measles, mumps, and rubella (MMR) vaccination programme provided an opportunity for comparison of autism spectrum disorders (ASD) incidence before and after termination of the programme. The findings of this research indicate that MMR vaccine is most unlikely to be a main cause of ASD; MMR vaccine cannot explain the rise over time in the incidence of ASD. Furthermore withdrawal of MMR in countries where it is still being used cannot be expected to lead to a reduction in the incidence of ASD.

Type 2 diabetes mellitus in European children and adolescents / MALECKA-TENDERA, Ewa; ERHARDT, Eva; MOLNAR, Denes

In: Acta Paediatrica 94(5), May 2005 543-546

The aim of the study was to review the data on type 2 diabetes in European children in order to determine how common this problem is in the dominantly Caucasian population. One hundred and eighty-four children with type 2 diabetes were diagnosed in Europe, 144 of them of Caucasian origin. The majority of them were overweight females and had positive family history for type 2 diabetes mellitus. Concludes that because of the significant rates of type 2 diabetes in Europe, screening for it in obese children and adolescents is highly recommended.
