Children as young as 10 are at risk from sexual exploitation

I was 12 when I met this bloke online. He said he was 18 but he was actually 26. He made me think we were close, then started giving me money, drugs and alcohol to have sex with other men. Barnardo's made me feel safe. They helped me see it wasn't my fault - and probably saved my life.

200,000 children have a parent in prison

Keith went inside when Ella was just three weeks old. Barnardo's Parenting Matters service has been a real lifeline for us. It gives them time together to play, have tea or a cuddle. It means they'll have a bond there, which is really important - Ella will know who her daddy is.

9,000 new foster carers are needed across the UK

I've fostered 29 children since I started with Barnardo's. It's not a nine-to-five job but I can't imagine doing anything else. I always wanted to work with children, and I feel very strongly about breaking the cycle – keeping them out of care by giving them a loving and stable home.

More than 800,000 young people are out of work

I'd been out of work for two years so my confidence and self-esteem had taken a knock. I got referred to Barnardo's who helped me get on the Scotland's Best programme. That helped prepare me for getting a job - I got skills training and did some volunteering. It really built my confidence and self-esteem back up, and gave me a new outlook on life.

Just 11 per cent of children in care get five GCSEs

Barnardo's has helped me so much. I came to England with nothing – they found me a place to stay, even cooking lessons so I can make food I used to eat back home. I'm happy I ended up in their hands, and I'm really happy they helped me get a place at university to study nursing.

Our children's centres give vital early support

Esmé has Rett Syndrome and needs one-to-one support. She gets tired easily, which really affects her movement and balance. Since she's been going to Barnardo's Little Breaks she's got much more confident. She interacts with other children now and loves getting involved. It's been great for her - and for us.
